

Run-Time Considerations for Path-Checking DFS

By Bradley Fox

Despite saving memory with respect to BFS, path-checking DFS may require significantly more run-time.

Consider this example :
if DFS began with the left-most node, it would peruse all legal nodes before finding the goal solution. BFS would find the goal solution without spending time on legal nodes below a depth of 1

